

Why Jute

Jute is 100% bio-degradable and thus environment friendly. A hectare of jute plants consume about 15 tonnes of carbon dioxide and releases 11 tonnes of oxygen.

Jute is grown majorly in the Ganges delta. Rural parts of Eastern India and Bangladesh are engaged with Jute development. It is an important cash crop of India, but is also a depleting industry, as Bangladesh and China continue to eat into the Jute exports of India.

Jute is bio-degradable, eco-friendly, highly durable, and vegan. It is cruelty-free and hence an ideal substitute to leather. It plays a crucial role in the livelihood of many people in India from the backward classes. Hence, promoting jute, meets both the objectives of social duty and green development

Planet Jute

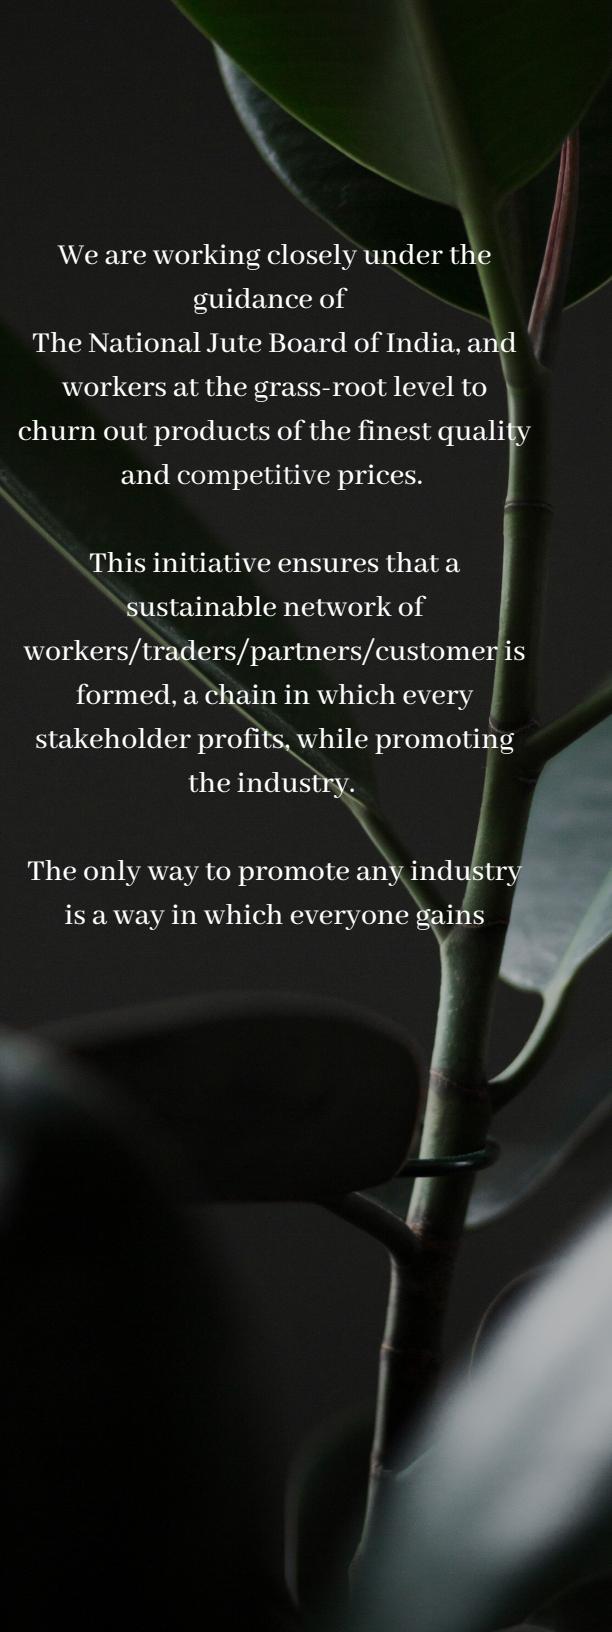

WHO ARE WE

We are Planet Jute, a company in collaboration with India's jute industry workers, exporting raw jute and jute products to traders overseas, and to direct overseas customers via e-commerce. We started off informally fulfilling orders for storage and packaging locally, and aim to market India's Jute industry, worldwide!

We strive to make the world cleaner, greener, cruelty-free, and more sustainable, by replacing plastic and harmful products.

We dream of replacing every plastic bag with a jute bag, replacing every leather bag with a jute bag, replacing every plastic sanitary pad with a jute pad, and replacing every plastic packaging with jute packaging.

We are working closely under the guidance of The National Jute Board of India, and workers at the grass-root level to churn out products of the finest quality and competitive prices.

This initiative ensures that a sustainable network of workers/traders/partners/customer is formed, a chain in which every stakeholder profits, while promoting the industry.

The only way to promote any industry is a way in which everyone gains
